

EXTREME GOLF SKIN DRIVER

No chance of Paul Snodgrass soiling his undies in this month's challenge – he wasn't wearing any. His driver wasn't the only thing swinging in the chilly Cape Agulhas breeze...

You'd think that if anybody wouldn't shock easily, a pair of drunken German lesbians would fit the bill. But even they drew the line at the thought of witnessing our latest Extreme Golf challenge. There they were, all settled in for a cosy evening on the rocks at the southern tip of Africa, bottle of wine in hand – until we warned them that Snodgrass was about to drop his shorts. They bolted like frightened weasels.

We'd already scared the good-natured group of British tourists away with our tales of the horror that was about to unfold, so we were left on our own for our latest record attempt. Probably for the best. Africa's southern-most nude golf shot was no place for the faint-hearted. Or anybody with the gift of sight, really.

After his near-misses last time out, at least Snodgrass could be sure there were no car windows for him to break down here. But, teed up on top of the spot marking the bottom (no pun intended...) of our beloved continent, danger was still lurking. If he was about to unleash his trademark low, left-bearing ball flight, there was every chance he'd hit the rocks. And the consequences of a rebound for our photographic equipment didn't bear thinking about.

But credit where it's due. As the curious Brits hovered in the distance pretending they weren't watching, he raised his game. Sure, it flew low, but the ball made it to the Southern Ocean. Or should that be Indian? It certainly wasn't Atlantic though – we promised you a hook, didn't we?!

Job done, everyone breathed a sigh of relief as Snoddy barked out the long-awaited order for his shorts. The German lesbians, it turned out, had made the right call. They'd have been right in the firing line. ☘

Think you have the ultimate test for our intrepid golfer?
